Thanks to your support, Ross faces his future with hope...

"Men need to hear that breast cancer can affect them too."

These are the words of breast cancer patient, Ross Schumacher, who is fighting the same disease which tragically claimed his mother's life 30 years ago.

Ross, 64, is one of more than 200 Australian men diagnosed with breast cancer every year. He is determined to ensure this diagnosis is no longer one that catches men off-guard.

"Some people say there's a stigma for men, but that's not true," Ross said.

"Everyone has been very empathetic to me and there's no need to be secretive about this—it's totally the opposite.

"Men need to look out for lumps and to get their skin checked every year."

A freelance TV cameraman, Ross had just returned to Brisbane from filming an overseas golf tournament when he noticed something was wrong.

"I was just relaxing on the couch at home when I found a lump on my chest, just beside my right nipple," he said. Straight away my wife, Una, who is a nurse, said "You are seeing a GP tomorrow."

"My GP told me that the biopsy had shown breast cancer. I said, 'So, male breast cancer is a thing?' and she replied 'Absolutely—one in 100 cases are male.'"

Ross Schumacher, pictured with Mater's Breast Cancer Clinical Nurse Consultant Ash Mondolo (left), and Clinical Nurse Olivia Gee (right).

Ross' breast cancer diagnosis follows a successful battle against prostate cancer five years ago. The eldest of his two sons battled testicular cancer as a teenager, while his youngest son also survived a childhood brain tumour.

"This is just another type of cancer, and it can happen to anyone, even though it's rare for men."

Mater breast cancer specialist, Dr Ben Lancashire, echoes Ross' sentiments.

"Male breast cancer tends to be overlooked and forgotten and we need to change that," Dr Lancashire said.

"There's a lot of awareness of prostate and bowel cancer among men, but not breast cancer, so it can be a real shock for those patients."

By purchasing Cars for Cancer tickets, you are helping to fuel vital cancer research, giving men like Ross hope of a brighter future. Thank you.

Congratulations to the winner of CFC 116!

Winning ticket number: 17325—Mrs. M from Holland Park, QLD.

"That is not the call I was expecting to receive. Thank you so much!", said Mrs M, the lucky winner of CFC116.

She's now upgrading her off-road touring set-up with her prize package of a Toyota LandCruiser Sahara ZX, the Lotus Off Grid Caravan, PLUS over $77.5K in gold bullion! Mrs M supports Mater Cars for Cancer, due to her personal connection to Mater. "Our little girl was preemie (born and cared for at Mater Mothers' Hospital). That's why we'll always help and be part of it, because the team were so beautiful with her."
